Psychology of Domestic Violence

DATE: November 22, 2019

Registration Ends: October 18, 2019

TIME: 8:00 AM—4:00 PM 8 Hours

LOCATION: NITAB training room, 527 Colman Center Drive, Rockford, IL

INSTRUCTOR: Gail Sullivan, MA

This course is also being offered in Dixon on November 21, 2019

COURSE CONTENT: The police represent the front line in the service response to domestic violence. Law Enforcement has a unique perspective on this all too common social problem. The police are often asked to intervene in this life-long problem of citizens in a few minutes. Answering a domestic disturbance call is the second most dangerous call an officer can answer.

This training takes into consideration the frustration of multiple calls to one address, the disenchantment of not understanding the dynamics of the repeat victim and the efforts that are being put into place to hold all parties accountable. Understanding the dynamics of domestic violence is paramount to law enforcement when they are evaluating and interpreting evidence and interviews at the domestic violence scene. Maintaining a working and updated understanding of legal mandates regarding domestic violence is imperative to successful law enforcement. Law enforcement also needs a positive and essential relationship with other organizations whose mission is to assist domestic violence issues.

The successful law enforcement officer has working knowledge of all of the aspects of domestic violence ranging from a psychological, legal, forensic, social and prevention.

This workshop will provide the officer with the tools needed to successfully answer one of the most difficult calls in law enforcement. It will prepare the participant with skills from all aspects of this crime.
